Some Pioneer Cemeteries of San Diego

Through the years, there have been many cemeteries in San Diego. As of the present time, some have evolved into establishments under a different name than found in the early records. Some sites have been abandoned and the remains and records moved elsewhere. Others, through lack of use, gradually became "lost" and due to lack of early precise land descriptions are not easily located at the present time. The first cemetery was located near the original mission, which was founded in 1769. It's site is between the present Serra Cross and Bastion site. It was called El Jardín del Rey (King's Garden). It was also referred to as the Franciscan Gardens. Among other early ones were Ballast Point (Point Loma); El Campo Santo (Catholic Cemetery, Old Town); Calvary Cemetery (Mission Hills); City Cemetery (since 1868, now called Mt. Hope); Fort Rosecrans National Cemetery (at Point Loma); Jewish Cemetery (original cemetery is no longer in existence and was in the area of present Sports Arena Blvd. and Rosecrans St.); IOOF (Oddfellows), Masonic and Protestant Cemeteries (all were originally in Old Town but they are no longer in existence; and the County Cemetery (now part of Mt. Hope Cemetery). The Jewish, IOOF, Masonic, and some other groups, between 1873-1892, asked the city that certain sections of Mt. Hope Cemetery be set aside for their use and administration. This was granted. By the 1920s and 1930s, these sections had been turned back to Mt. Hope Cemetery jurisdiction. The County Cemetery also became part of Mt. Hope.
